Interesting Points:

- . “Results show that website maturity and content development are positively related, and that the aforementioned restaurants are not taking advantage of the opportunities that the Internet offers, and show different progress depending on the country where they are located and the category.”
- . This means that as a website improves over time, so does the quality of the content on it but they are not fully utilizing the benefits of the internet like online reservations or e-commerce
- . The progress of a websites maturity & content development depends on geographic location, example in Spain I can guess there’s less of a need for high quality websites as they are behind on a technological standpoint by a decade or so

- . “The Internet allows the consumer to be more and more demanding and better informed” (Law and Bai, 2008)
- . This means that the expectation of a high-quality website is greater than ever, something to think about when implementing features for our website

- . “If we focus on restaurants we can say that it is one of the sectors that has been most affected by Internet innovation” (Miranda et al., 2015)
- . This enforces the point that there’s a higher expectation on restraint websites being good, plus they have had to innovate with things such as online reservations, online ordering, social media marketing & digital menus & intuitive websites

- . “Information search plays a very important role in consumer restaurant selection and decision-making” (Yilmaz and Gultekin, 2016)
- . This means that people choose a restaurant to go to depending on the information they can get on a google search, something to consider if we actually deploy our site as it will benefit from being as close to the top as possible when searched

Conclusion:

Restaurant websites are now a key part of ecommerce as well as tourism for countries as people are willing to travel the world to try different regions cuisines & dishes. There are quite a few good points to take away from this article but the most important one for me is the fact that internet innovation has impacted restaurants far greater than majority of the other sectors. This means that we have a greater responsibility for coming up with fresh ideas as well as implementing existing ideas at a higher level than examples we can already find on the internet. Innovation will lead us to success & is something we will discuss before continuing with the project.
